The image shows a detailed view of the upper portion of a classical building facade. At the top, a central pediment contains a relief sculpture. Below it, a white stone balcony with a balustrade runs across the width of the building. In the center of this balcony, a rectangular plaque displays the year '1701'. Below the balcony is a decorative frieze featuring a repeating pattern of small, carved figures. The main section of the facade is a light yellow color with a prominent horizontal band containing the Latin inscription 'ACADEMIA PHILHARMONICORUM' in dark, serif capital letters. Below this band are three large, arched windows with dark frames and light-colored curtains. Each window is set within a white, fluted pilaster and is topped with an ornate, carved architrave. A decorative balustrade runs along the base of the window openings. The lower part of the image shows the top of a row of smaller, arched windows, with decorative brackets and light fixtures visible on the facade.
